FINDING YOU

A big brother was having trouble with his little brother. Whatever the big brother was doing, the little one wanted to do too. If he was walking, he was followed by his brother. If he was watching TV, his brother would join him on the couch and sometimes walk up to the screen and block his older brother's view. What especially annoyed the big brother was that, his brother wanted to join in when his friends came over to play. The bigger one would complain to their mom, "Mom, make Tommy come into the house. I want to play with my friends!"

Their mother replied, "Be patient with him, Joey. He just admires you."

Joey had little appreciation for his brother's esteem. He had no idea that his brother was learning how to be a human being through his example. He just wanted to play.

Awareness comes to us in dribs and drabs all life long. Some days you are sure what kind of person you are; other days you are unfocused and confused. You find you are good at singing but all thumbs on the baseball field. Your sister teaches you a new card game and soon you are so good at it that you beat her most of the time. If you feel threatened, you're likely to come out fighting, while others just walk away. Sometimes, listening to yourself, you wonder, "Why in the world did I say that?"

You look for heroes and models. In school you learn about the first U.S. president; you are told to be like George Washington: never tell a lie. In church you hear about the sacrificial love of Mother Teresa and you yourself want to do something to help the poor and dying. At an Angels game, you are impressed by a particular player and you want to be a homerun hitter like him. You watch Extra! Extra! on TV and wonder what it would be like if you were an actor, a movie star, a celebrity. In the end, you can emulate some of the honesty of Washington, the caring of Mother Teresa, and the skills of a great baseball player. Whether or not you become a celebrity belongs to fate, I'm afraid, but it wouldn't hurt if you were friends with Meryl Streep.

Through experiment and experience you do get some idea of who you really are and others help since they tell you what they notice about you. "Though you are almost always late, you are a friend I can always count on."

Long ago I read a book entitled, "Sayings of the Desert Fathers." It contained various sayings and stories about hermits and monks who, starting in the third century, left the cities and went into the deserts of Egypt and the Middle East to live lives of prayer and mortification. While I loved the candid honesty of these humble disciples, I had a hard time imagining what they did in their hermitages and caves. You can't pray all day and night. The greatest of those men was Anthony who wrote a rule to focus their austere lives. It began, "I write to you as men of understanding who are able to know yourselves: you know that he who knows himself knows God." The way to get to know God is to better know oneself. By means of their solitude and ascetical practices, they discovered who they were.

We come to church, pray and follow the Bible so we can know and love God more. But we will be also discovering the unique secret that is each of us. We will be astonished.

Msgr. Mike

LIFE AND DIGNITY

Every person is made in God’s image and likeness, and is loved by Him and called to eternal union with Him. We are also created to be in communion with, and depend upon, one another. "Holiness consists simply in doing God's will, and being just what God wants us to be."

— St. Therese of Lisieux

My dear Parish Family,

Words cannot begin to express the tremendous gratitude on behalf of my niece and myself over the immense outpouring of your love and condolences over the sudden death of my sister Diane. Your words of sympathy, prayers, and Masses offered for her are truly gratifying. Your support, love and care were able not only to help me through my sister's death but also through a cousin's funeral a few days later.

A huge thanks to our Bereavement Ministry in their support and helping to set up things so beautifully for the Church and reception in the hall, for all of your who participated in the liturgy and were there at Mass, to our Knights of Columbus who were pallbearers at the Mass and made the two hour journey to the cemetery, to Greg at Risher Mortuary, our musicians, Jan, Virginia, Sandy, Lori, Tim and the countless others who pitched in, a thank you, thank you, thank you from the depths of my heart! You are in my prayers and Masses. Fr. Bob
