BREAKING BREAD

As a youngster, bread was always “wonder bread,” a white bread without much taste but which served well with butter and jam for toast and held the bologna in place when you were eating a sandwich. Ubiquitous, I didn’t think anything of it unless we were running low. It was what we ate. Except that me and my siblings did not like the “hard crusts” and begged my mother to slice them off, which she rarely agreed to do, saying, “That’s where all the nutrients are.” To heck with nutrients; we didn’t know what they were.

When I was in the seminary I was occasionally on a weekend at the dinner table at St. Boniface rectory in Anaheim. The pastor, a Belgian who served as chaplain to American forces during Second World War and decided to come to America when the yanks went home, Fr. John Quatannens, ate no bread but baguettes, long skinny loaves that were more crust than bread. (In fact he would often crack his piece in half and scoop out and dispose of the soft white inner core, returning to ravenously devour the crusty rest.) Baguettes were not sliced, they were broken, as the loaf was handed to each person at the table to take as much as desired. I was used to putting butter on my bread. (Why wouldn’t I? White bread was nearly tasteless; it certainly needed something.) Obviously this was not Father Quatannens style. Eating the bread alone was more than enough, the exception being for dipping it into a rich sauce if dinner came with such a sauce.

By such experiences I came to begin to understand the New Testament passages having to do with the breaking of bread. A few weeks ago, we heard Luke’s account of two disciples returning home after Jesus’ death, disheartened and disappointed. They invited a stranger to join them on their walk, and this stranger asked what anyone would ask, “What’s going on?” The disciples were surprised that this man hadn’t heard what happened to Jesus; all Jerusalem was abuzz with the goings-on. About Jesus, one of them, Cleopas, said “We were hoping he would be the one who would redeem Israel.” As you know from hearing it many times, Jesus held a tutorial about the meaning of what had happened as they continued walking all the way to Emmaus. But he remained a stranger to them until dinner, during which Jesus picked up the bread “said the blessing, broke it and gave it to them.” Then their eyes were opened and they realized who was dining with them. Only at the moment of the breaking of the bread were their eyes were opened. Cleopas and his friend ran back to those locked up in the upper room, “They began to relate their experiences on the road and how he was recognized by them in the breaking of the bread.”

At the last supper before Jesus died, Jesus had broken bread. “Take and eat. This is my body.” It’s typical of Jesus to make the simplest daily event holy. The Acts of the Apostles said about the harmonious disciples, “They were continually devoting themselves to the apostles’ teaching and to fellowship, to the breaking of bread and to prayer.” Later in the Acts, they were “breaking bread from house to house and taking their meals together with gladness and sincerity of heart.” Saint Paul joined the community at Miletus during which they “had broken the bread and eaten, [and then] he talked with them a long while until daybreak, and then left.” Yes, Paul talked for a long time; good thing they had broken the bread beforehand.

Today “breaking bread” is still a common expression for dining together. Often enough someone will ask, “Shall we break bread?” Since recently we have all eaten far too many meals alone or almost alone, You, as I do, look forward to being able to “break bread” together, giving nourishment both to tummy and soul.

Zoom, thank you for letting me see people at internet meetings. Skype, I don’t know you well, but I am sure we will get acquainted soon enough. Thanks for letters, emails, texts and phone calls (except from those trying to sell me something) but nothing matches the pleasure of breaking bread.

In my family, inviting someone to dinner was a significant event. On Saturday evening when my Dad barbecued porterhouse steaks so huge they poured over the sides of the plates. The rest of the week we were left to our studies, chores, sports and hobbies, but then the family came together around the picnic table for dinner; our invited friends knew that they were to be part of something special, the breaking of the bread at the Heher household.
